YOUTH IN NEED OF CASH TO WED TRIES EXTORTION

WAUSEON, Dec. 28.—(UP)—A youth who said he wanted money for marriage on his 21st birthday was in Fulton county jail today, accused of attempting to extort $25,000 from Fred J. Longnecker, retired official of the Oval Wood Display Co., of Traverse City, Mich.

Paul Simmons, 20, of Delta, has admitted, according to Sheriff Harley Loveland, that he left a note on Longnecker's porch in Delta early Sunday, threatening to kill him by this morning if he did not surrender $25,000.

The note instructed Longnecker to provide the money in $10 and $20 bills, and to drive alone along U. S. Route 20, where he would receive a signal from an automobile.

Six deputy sheriffs, led by Chief Deputy Leslie Irvin, took Longnecker's car and another automobile and went out on the highway. They got the signal mentioned, blocked the car from which it came and arrested Simmons.

He was unarmed and offered no resistance. He told the officers he wanted to get married on his 21st birthday next month, and wanted to "borrow" the money from Longnecker. He had 20 cents in his pocket.

HULL AND AIDES SATISFIED WITH LIMA GATHERING

LIMA, Peru, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Secretary of State Cordell Hull and other members of the United States delegation to the eighth Pan American conference are completely satisfied with the work done here toward uniting the 21 American republics against outside aggression, it was understood today.

The conference ended last night, and the United States delegates sail for home in the liner Santa Maria today. It was pointed out that when the conference started the United States delegates wanted it first to point directly toward the totalitarian nations as possible aggressors and secondly to provide for regular, periodic consultation among the foreign ministers of American nations.

However, the United States delegates, though admitting that the "Declaration of Lima" against aggression had not named outside nations as possible aggressors and that no means had been provided for consultation at specified intervals, asserted that the declaration actually laid the foundation on which to build later an all-American solidarity edifice.

Undeterred by a series of apparently inspired denials of earlier reports about Italy's and France's activities in connection with an Italian drive for concessions from France, the newspapers continued their campaign of warning to French people against dangers ahead.

Michigan City Isolated As Communication System
Is Broken

The mercury dropped to 12 degrees in Circleville Tuesday night, the reading being the lowest of the season.

Fair and warmer weather was predicted for Wednesday with snow on Thursday's forecast. Highest temperature Tuesday was 36 degrees.

BY UNITED PRESS

The most severe cold wave of the Winter stretched icy tentacles toward the Eastern Seaboard states today and penetrated even sections of the deep South.

Intense cold already had spread over the Plains states, the lower Missouri, Mississippi and Ohio river valleys and the Great Lakes region. Blizzards raged across the upper Michigan peninsula and in parts of Ohio, Pennsylvania and upper New York.

U. S. Forecaster J. R. Lloyd at Chicago expected that the cold would cover every portion of the country east of the Rocky Mountains by tonight. He said great masses of polar air still were sweeping southeastward from the MacKenzie river basin and that the cold might not abate for a week.

Zero Readings Prevail

Zero readings were reported from the Rockies to Michigan and a line of near zero temperatures stretched northeastward from Pennsylvania across New York into northern England. Temperatures reached the freezing point in portions of southern Texas and were sub-normal in Florida. The Pacific coast was the only section of the country to escape the cold.

Toledo, O., a city of 300,000 population, faced a threat of a water shortage. High off-shore winds had blown so much water of the Maumee river into Lake Erie the water department was forced to draw on emergency supplies stored in reservoirs. The river is the city's only source for water. Its stage dropped six feet yesterday and the city's intake was cut to nearly one-fifth of normal.

George Schoonmaker, city engineer, said the threat of a famine had subsided but warned citizens to economize rigidly.

"We still may be forced to cut off the water completely at any hour to assure a fire protection emergency supply," he said.

At least three persons died as a result of the cold and strong winds. Two aged men died of heart attacks caused by over-exertion in attempting to walk against a 66-mile-an-hour gale at Buffalo, N. Y. A young factory worker froze to death in an alley in the industrial section of Muncie, Ind.

More Snow Expected

Lloyd predicted additional snow today for the Plains states and for extreme southern sections tonight. He said temperatures would moderate slightly in a few scattered sections of the South tomorrow but they would drop in the upper Missouri valley, Southwest and East. He said another disturbance was forming over Wyoming and that conditions in that area probably would become worse.

North Central and Lake states felt the brunt of the cold. Snow and winds of velocities ranging up to 46 miles per hour virtually paralyzed the Upper Michigan

BY UNITED PRESS

The most severe cold wave of the Winter stretched icy tentacles toward the Eastern Seaboard states today and penetrated even sections of the deep South.

Intense cold already had spread over the Plains states, the lower Missouri, Mississippi and Ohio river valleys and the Great Lakes region. Blizzards raged across the upper Michigan peninsula and in parts of Ohio, Pennsylvania and upper New York.

U. S. Forecaster J. R. Lloyd at Chicago expected that the cold would cover every portion of the country east of the Rocky Mountains by tonight. He said great masses of polar air still were sweeping southeastward from the MacKenzie river basin and that the cold might not abate for a week.

Zero Readings Prevail

Zero readings were reported from the Rockies to Michigan and a line of near zero temperatures stretched northeastward from Pennsylvania across New York into northern England. Temperatures reached the freezing point in portions of southern Texas and were sub-normal in Florida. The Pacific coast was the only section of the country to escape the cold.

Toledo, O., a city of 300,000 population, faced a threat of a water shortage. High off-shore winds had blown so much water of the Maumee river into Lake Erie the water department was forced to draw on emergency supplies stored in reservoirs. The river is the city's only source for water. Its stage dropped six feet yesterday and the city's intake was cut to nearly one-fifth of normal.

George Schoonmaker, city engineer, said the threat of a famine had subsided but warned citizens to economize rigidly.

"We still may be forced to cut off the water completely at any hour to assure a fire protection emergency supply," he said.

At least three persons died as a result of the cold and strong winds. Two aged men died of heart attacks caused by over-exertion in attempting to walk against a 66-mile-an-hour gale at Buffalo, N. Y. A young factory worker froze to death in an alley in the industrial section of Munich, Ind.

More Snow Expected

Lloyd predicted additional snow today for the Plains states and for extreme southern sections to night. He said temperatures would moderate slightly in a few scattered sections of the South tomorrow but they would drop in the upper Missouri valley, Southwest and East. He said another disturbance was forming over Wyoming and that conditions in that area probably would become worse.

North Central and Lake states felt the brunt of the cold. Snow and winds of velocities ranging up to 46 miles per hour virtually paralyzed the Upper Michigan (Continued on Page Eight)

Woman, Two Men Who Knew Musica's Secret Face Extortion Counts

POLICE ENGAGE IN FIGHT

Mary Brandino Given $8,000 In Last Year, U. S. Attorneys Say

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Police held a woman and two men today and sought five more persons, all on suspicion of having blackmailed F. Donald Coster, the swindling president of McKesson and Robbins, Inc., who killed himself when he was exposed as Philip Musica, an ex-convict.

The prisoners, belligerent and uncommunicative, were Mary Brandino, 37; her brother, Joseph, 61, and Walter H. Cragg, 56, a disbarred lawyer imprisoned in 1914 for embezzling a client's funds.

The other suspects were not named. Together, they were believed to have extorted most or all the $150,000 a year that Coster-Musica swindled from his company.

The three were held on federal charges of using the mails to defraud and "conspiring with others to extort sums of money from Philip Musica." They were among the few persons who knew of Coster-Musica's 18 year masquerade, during which he invaded Wall street with the profits of bootlegging, won the confidence of financiers and organized the third largest drug firm in the country.

Two Put Up Fight

Cragg submitted peaceably to arrest. Miss Brandino was defiant when taken from her home to Sheephead Bay police station. Her brother followed to learn why she was arrested. He was informed that he, too, was wanted. He reached to the floor and picked up a cuspidor for a weapon and Miss Brandino flung her handbag at a policeman.

Disarmed, Brandino ran to a back room, picked up a board and advanced, swinging it. Again disarmed, he was questioned and locked up as was his sister.

It was reported that Miss Brandino had received $8,000 from Coster-Musica last year. Gregory Noonan, assistant United States attorney who ordered the arrests, said the Brandinos had been partners of Coster-Musica in 1920 in the Adelphi Drug company in Brooklyn, his first venture after he had dropped from sight a few months earlier while under indictment, as Musica, on perjury charges.

Go-Between Talks

Detective John P. McAuliffe said that information about the Brandinos had been supplied by Benjamin Simon, who is held as a material witness and is believed to have served Coster-Musica as go-between in arms and munitions dealings. The swindler was believed to have tried to recoup his shortages by traffic in arms and bootleg liquor. Although his manipulations with the drugs firm left it with an $18,000,000 shortage, his thefts amounted apparently, to about $3,000,000.

Villagers Do Well With Holiday Cheer Prevailing

By S. D. Fridley

Even though there were several days of Christmas celebrations and Sunday and day school exercises here and in the community, the best of good cheer and kindness of spirit prevailed through it all. Liberal donations were made to the community gift supplies with some 60 baskets of food delivered into the home of that many families. And with these food supplies many toys manufactured by E. F. Schlegel in his hobby shop, went along with them. Committees composed of ladies of the different local churches, assisted by Atty. Harry Margulies, had the job of making up these baskets and it was no easy task.

The Will Fisher and Son three delivery trucks manned by the Boy Scouts, made the delivery's Saturday afternoon. "Down on the corner" many children had the opportunity to meet Old Santa himself and who distributed some of his presents among them. And we have just learned that the "Good Old Gent" left something more than $300 with the Rev. E. H. E. Winterhoff over at the St. Paul church. The Rev. Mr. Winterhoff is pastor of both the Groveport and St. Paul Lutheran congregations.

Even though Spring is near a dozen weeks away, the first installment of movers are reported as getting busy this week. Philip Dalley has sold his, what is known as the Foust cottage on the East side and will remove to Johnstown.

METHODIST MEN MEET IN CITY ON JANUARY 11

Rev. C. F. Bowman To Be Host As County Groups Gathers For Program

JAMES FINNEY TO SPEAK

Session Removed From New Holland Because Of Pulpit Changes

Methodist men of Pickaway county will gather in the Circleville church Wednesday evening, Jan. 11, for the regular monthly meeting of the Pickaway county Methodist Brotherhood. The Rev. C. F. Bowman, of the Circleville church, will be the host pastor. He is arranging an elaborate program for the evening.

The speakers will be James H. Finney, of Portsmouth, rated throughout southern Ohio as an outstanding church and community worker. At present he teaches two Men's Brotherhoods each Sunday.

The January meeting of the brotherhood was originally scheduled for New Holland, but it has been transferred to Circleville because of the recent change in the pastorate of the New Holland church. The Rev. V. C. Stump, of Carroll, Fairfield county, has just been named to fill the pulpit left vacant by the removal of the Rev. R. M. Morris to Bainbridge. The latter fills the vacancy left by the death of the Rev. Russell H. Bready.

The county Brotherhood, organized a year ago, is headed by Homer Reber of Walnut township. The Rev. Mr. Bowman said Tuesday that arrangements will be made to accommodate churchmen making reservations with their own pastors.

The host pastor is planning some special music for the entertainment of the brotherhood.

NO PROTESTS HEARD AS COUNTY SEEKS GARAGE

No protests were filed Tuesday with the county commissioners on the proposed purchase of the Ruggles building between Main and High streets on Canal street for a county garage and storage building.

Commissioners said arrangements for the purchase would be completed at the meeting next Tuesday. No meeting will be held Monday due to the observance of New Year's Day.

Purchase of the building will result in the county saving money by having supplies and equipment in a central location instead of scattered about in many places, officials say.

The Ruggles building was formerly a packing house. In recent years it had been used for storage purposes.

THE SPIRIT of Christmas still abides with surprising force and joyousness, fostered by most beneficent planetary auspices. Social, domestic and romantic activities still hold the interest, largely because of some subtle and fascinating events that spell intrigue, secrecy or undercover attachments. But these carry a menace of malice, gossip or deep hostility that should be guarded against.

Those whose birthday it is may find themselves engulfed in a year in which the sentimental, romantic, social and artistic engage the attention, relegating more sordid activities into the background unless they partake of this more alluring quality. Intrigues and secrecy abound in this connection, calling for discretion and wariness against gossip, slander and bitter attack. Friends, especially women, may be appealed to for support.

A child born on this day may be devoted to the cultural, mystical, romantic and probably the curious and unusual, rather than the practical and sordid. It may have an out-of-the-ordinary gift for fine creative art expression, or devote its life to altruism or social betterment.

An important member of the cast of "The Little Adventurers" is Counto, the Wonder Horse, whom Edith conducts through a vaudeville routine which involves the answering of questions, and the addition of figures.

Counto is Edith's sole possession when her parents are killed during their performance of a "slide for life," and the banjo-strumming "Ukelele Ike" is cast as her sole friend, who helps her reach relatives in California.

AT THE GRAND

Jean Hersholt, who appears for the third time with the Dionne Quintuplets in the 20th Century-Fox picture "Five of a Kind," now at the Grand theatre, observes that Yvonne, Cecile, Marie, Annette and Emilie are making a better financial start on the screen than he himself did when he arrived in Hollywood 25 years ago.

"The Quintuplets got more an hour for their work in this picture than I got for an entire picture when I first started, and they're worth every cent of it," Hersholt said. "When I went to work at Inceville I was paid $15.00 a week, and probably wasn't worth it."

In "Five of a Kind," the Quins are revealed as real troupers and entertainers. They sing, dance, make music, and tell you all about it... in a modern big-town story that whirls in and out of New York's Broadway as two romantic-minded reporters, played by Claire Trevor and Cesar Romero, race after the year's biggest television scoop.

AT THE CIRCLE

Melvin Douglas and Florence Rice as a delightful husband and wife who share a life of high adventure are featured in "Fast Company," new romantic mystery which opens tonight at the Circle Theatre.

They are involved in the activities of a gang obtaining enormous sums of stolen rare books that are duplicated and then sold by an international ring of dealers. When a double-cross occurs in a "hot book" deal a murder is committed which requires the efforts of Douglas as an amateur book sleuth to solve the crime.

A highly entertaining blend of hectic comedy, fast-moving action, romance and thrills is blended into the picture which is based on the book of Marco Page. Featured in the cast with Douglas and Miss Rice are Claire Dodd, Sheppard Strudwick, Louis Calhern, Nat Pendleton and Douglas Dumbrille.

Four New England sailors are on their way to Alaska in an 18-foot lifeboat because, they say, New York is crowded. Oh! for a more abundant life on the ocean wave, in an 18-foot lifeboat.

Davey Ready to Fight For Leasure and Knisley

COLUMBUS, Dec. 28—Governor Martin L. Davey will fight personally for his "lame duck" appointees, it was indicated here today. Ohio's executive department rose to the defense of Charles F. Leasure, chairman of the Unemployment Compensation Commission, and State Treasurer Clarence H. Knisley who is the governor's choice for the Civil Service Commission vacancy when Daniel B. Earhart, the governor's executive secretary, said that a fight would be made for their confirmation.

Mr. Earhart, speaking for the governor, announced officially that these two names would be submitted to the senate Friday when it convenes in special session, and incidentally defended the Unemployment Compensation Commission against charges of inefficiency.

"There may be some basis of criticism of the Unemployment Compensation Commission," Mr. Earhart said, "but I think that if Mr. Leasure is confirmed for a six year term that he will be as good an administrator as could be found. I know something about the problems confronting Mr. Leasure, and much of the criticism leveled at him and his commission should be laid at the door of the Social Security Board in Washington.

Policies Cited

"The problems confronting Mr. Leasure have not only been problems of administration, but there have been problems involving the making of policies, and these problems have been extremely difficult because they are subject to Washington's O.K. In many instances Security Board rulings have not been made for months after the request for a ruling was forwarded to them."

Some of the criticism directed at the commission involved delay in opening offices, appointment of personnel and unpreparedness in general for accepting claims as of January 1.

Although the governor's call for a special session issued last week, said the purpose was to reenact the cigarette and liquid fuel taxes for the benefit of the public school fund, Mr. Earhart admitted that the primary purpose of calling Ohio's legislature to Columbus

Davey Ready to Fight For Leisure and Knisley

COLUMBUS, Dec. 28—Governor Martin L. Davey will fight personally for his "lame duck" appointees, it was indicated here today.

Ohio's executive department rose to the defense of Charles F. Leasure, chairman of the Unemployment Compensation Commission, and State Treasurer Clarence H. Knisley who is the governor's choice for the Civil Service Commission vacancy when Daniel B. Earhart, the governor's executive secretary, said that a fight would be made for their confirmation.

Mr. Earhart, speaking for the governor, announced officially that these two names would be submitted to the senate Friday when it convenes in special session, and incidentally defended the Unemployment Compensation Commission against charges of inefficiency.

"There may be some basis of criticism of the Unemployment Compensation Commission," Mr. Earhart said, "but I think that if Mr. Leasure is confirmed for a six year term that he will be as good an administrator as could be found. I know something about the problems confronting Mr. Leasure, and much of the criticism leveled at him and his commission should be laid at the door of the Social Security Board in Washington.

Policies Cited
"The problems confronting Mr. Leasure have not only been problems of administration, but there have been problems involving the making of policies, and these problems have been extremely difficult because they are subject to Washington's O. K. In many instances Security Board rulings have not been made for months after the request for a ruling was forwarded to them."

Some of the criticism directed at the commission involved delay in opening offices, appointment of personnel and unpreparedness in general for accepting claims as of January 1.

Although the governor's call for a special session issued last week, said the purpose was to reenact the cigarette and liquid fuel taxes for the benefit of the public school fund, Mr. Earhart admitted that the primary purpose of calling Ohio's legislature to Columbus was for confirmation of Mr. Leasure's appointment.

Neither Mr. Earhart nor Governor Davey would discuss further the possible re-enactment of the two taxes.

Political observers predict that the senate "hatchet-men" who have opposed the governor in the past will block both appointments and possibly may refuse to do anything about re-enactment of the two taxes.

Foss Is Opposed
Earlier Senator William R. Foss, chairman of the finance committee, had gone on record as opposing the appointments and had said he would do nothing, personally, to assist the governor in pushing through his last-minute program.

Senator Foss denied rumors of a deal between the governor and the "hatchet-men."

SENSITIVE AUTOCRATS
ONCE more it is evident, as we say in our vulgar American way, that the autocracies "can dish it, but they can't take it."
For years Nazi statesmen and editors have been "pouring it out" upon the democracies and their free representatives of government and press. Lately our newspapers, magazines and public officials have started talking to them, and about them, in their own fashion, using terms they can understand. As a result, the sensitive gangsters who have been robbing, torturing and killing their political and racial minorities, and telling the rest of the world to go to hell, are all in a dither of self-pity and righteous indignation.
The latest Nazi roar came in response to a few well chosen words uttered by Harold L. Ickes, secretary of the interior, expressing in plain English what most Americans think of the Fuehrer's programs.
Our government refuses to apologize to the Nazi government for this unusual outburst. So do the American press and the American public.
The democracies are tired of being dictated to and kicked around, and are at last beginning to go their own way, tell the truth about alien systems and brutal barbarism, and defend free civilization. The Nazis who have Germany by the throat and are kicking Europe around can no longer kick America around.

FOREHANDED CHARITY
MAIMONIDES, a Jewish leader of the twelfth century and one of the world's great men, wrote a "Guide for the Perplexed" containing precepts which the human race would do well to follow. He named eight degrees of charity, seven of which may be observed in the world around us today. The eighth remains rather largely an ideal. They are:
First, giving with reluctance or regret.
Second, giving cheerfully but not proportionately to the need existing.
Third, giving cheerfully and proportionately, but not until asked.
Fourth, giving cheerfully, proportionately and unsolicited, but causing the recipient to feel ashamed at being an object of charity.
Fifth, giving in a way which permits the distressed to know his benefactor without himself being known.
Sixth, giving to people in distress without their knowing the giver.
Seventh, giving in such a way that both benefactor and benefitted remain unknown to each other.
The eighth, and most meritorious, degree is the anticipation of charity by the prevention of poverty. An individual might do this by a large gift or loan, or by helping a person get a job at which he can earn his own livelihood without asking or requiring charity. Society might do it by establishing a sound economic order in which the able-bodied and able-minded could be happily and remuneratively occupied and the helpless provided for without marking them as indigents or paupers.

THREE IN SQUABBLE
WASHINGTON — There have been plenty of brawls among the New Dealers, but nothing like the one over who should succeed Attorney General Cummings. For bare-knuckle mauling and gouging it takes the cake.
The furious undercover scrap centered around three men—Solicitor General Robert Jackson and Governor Frank Murphy, the President's first and second choices, and Assistant Attorney General Brien McMahon, candidate of Jim Farley and the retiring Cummings.
A week ago Roosevelt had decided to name Jackson, after being convinced by congressional leaders that Murphy would have hard sledding to be confirmed by the Senate. When Farley got wind of this decision he unlimbered his guns and moved in against Jackson.
At the start he was opposed to Jackson and Murphy both, the first because he saw in the rising young New Yorker a menace to his own 1940 political ambitions; and the second because of Murphy's strong pro-labor record, which he considered a political disadvantage.
Jim did not, of course, openly oppose Jackson on personal political grounds. He raised the point of geography. With four New Yorkers in the Cabinet—himself, Morgenthau, Miss Perkins, and now Harry Hopkins—he told Roosevelt that the addition of still another would be resented by the rest of the country.
Jim urged McMahon for the vacancy, but when he saw that was getting nowhere, he counseled Murphy.
Farley was so confident he had won his point that he tipped off intimates that Murphy would be appointed. When Jackson's friend heard this they, in turn, stormed the White House and the battle got hotter than ever.
The only ones who took no part in it were the three candidates themselves. All personal friends and mutual admirers, they kept well out of the fight.

CHRISTMAS CARDS
Republican Christmas card: GOP Chairman John Hamilton's Yule greeting was a rejuvenated elephant emerging from a hut with this caption, "Out of the doghouse."
Democratic Christmas card: John E. Kennedy, secretary to Representative Jerry O'Connell, defeated Montana New Dealer, distributed black-bordered cards with this doleful message: "There ain't no Santa Claus." At the bottom in very small type was this dig at the Dies Committee: "Not printed in Moscow or at government expense."
There is a German saying that "trees stop growing before they reach the sky" and perhaps dictatorships won't go on forever. The immediate question is whether they can be stopped before they make it necessary for civilization to go back and work up from the bottom again.

WHERE CREDIT IS DUE
IT IS NOT merely kind to give the opponents credit when credit is due them. It is also winning bridge, much more profitable in the long run than berating yourself and partner for not achieving the maximum result on a deal and thereby upsetting your side's morale. On many an occasion the bidding done by the other fellows makes it impossible for you to send as many messages across the table as you would like to.
In all cases East opened with 1-Heart, and subsequent bidding varied only slightly. Usually South overcalled with 1-Spade, West bid 2-Hearts, North 3-Clubs, East 3-Hearts, South 3-Spades, West 4-Hearts and North 4-Spades, which became the contract.
North might have figured that, with the splendid fit shown by the opponents in hearts, his own four cards there guaranteed that his partner had one or none. He might have read that for his overall his partner might have had the club ace, but that would have been rather presumptuous. However, of course seven were made, by ruffing one diamond and discarding two of them on the clubs.

Dropped in at city hall and heard Mayor Bill hang a $10 fine on a reckless motorist. That mayor of ours has no sympathy whatever for the auto driver who endangers the lives of others. I am in favor of that, for nothing slows down a crazy driver like a blow to his pocketbook. Drunken driving is rapidly ceasing to be any fun at all in this village, what with fines ranging up to $500.

DIET AND HEALTH
Keep Fit at Forty By Thinking Young

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.
A GOOD many years ago I began collecting books which tell you how to keep young, or how to live comfortably to a ripe old age.
There are quite a lot of them. Heaven knows when the first ones were written. The oldest one I have is that of Arnold of Villanova, which appeared in 1290 A. D. Villanova was a Spaniard, a friend of the contemporary popes and kings of Spain, Naples and Sicily. King James of Spain asked him to write a treatise on preserving youth, so he compiled his "Defence of Age and Recovery of Youth".
Francis Bacon, the philosopher whom some misguided souls think wrote Shakespeare, also published such a treatise.
There is a kind of air of mortality that hangs around these works. There seems to be no surer way to die young than to write a treatise on how to live long. Bacon died at 65, and Villanova lived to be about 70, surely no record for a specialist on longevity. The only advocates of a system of long life who attained a ripe age were an Italian, Louis Carnaro, and Metchnikoff, and they had the canniness to wait until they were old before giving advice on the subject.
Latest Is Favorite
But the latest edition to my collection is my favorite. It seems to me that it gives the only sensible advice I have ever heard on this debatable subject. It is called "How to Look Eleven Years Younger", by Gellert Burgess.
Mr. Burgess is not a beautician; he does not attempt to advise you how to look 11 years younger by cosmetics or face-lifting, or to keep fit by exercises or diet or various prohibitions. He believes that youth is in the mind, and if you want to look 11 years younger, you have to do it by making your intellectual interests 11 years younger.
He has as frontpiece, a photograph—not a drawing, mind you, but a photograph—of a man and woman, husband and wife, sitting at a table in a restaurant. They have just ordered dinner, the waiter has gone off to get this order and they are waiting.
Some of Mr. Burgess' aphorisms: "Crow's feet are caused by grins and grimaces and usually go with a fallen face."
"A perpetual smile that means nothing is a senile trait."
"Beauty parlors cannot make you youthful. The only efficacious facial massage is done from within by the mind."
"Dancing is a public revelation of the secrets of the subconscious mind and its revelations are often disastrous."
EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendinging can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendinging, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Good Diet", "Indigestion and Constipation", "Reducing and Gaining", "Infant Feeding", "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes", "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin".

DEATH AT THE MANOR
BY M. E. CORNE
RELEASED BY CENTRAL PRESS ASSOCIATION
For one agonizing second I stood frozen.
READ THIS FIRST:
Elsie Ritter, a beauty shop operator, taking the place of her friend, Kitty, for a week in the private salon of Mrs. Horace Witherspoon, Sr., is disturbed by queer things she finds and odd people she meets at the Manor, the luxurious Witherspoon home. She finds her employer is an eccentric old woman with a misplaced vanity. She meets her granddaughter, Daphne; her daughter-in-law, Della Craig, an actress, who is a house guest, and the various servants of the household. Elsie overhears a violent argument between Daphne and her mother, during which the girl criticizes her grandmother. After meeting some of the other house guests, Elsie gives a manicure to old Mrs. Witherspoon's sister, who converses in riddles. While Mrs. Witherspoon, Sr., is under one of the four hair driers in the salon, Phil, Elsie's friend, drops in to see her and telephones from downstairs. Elsie goes down to see him.
(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)
CHAPTER TEN
"LORDY!" I shot up like a jack-in-the-box when the kitchen clock struck ten. "I've been sitting here half an hour! Mrs. Witherspoon will give me what for!"
"Oh, let the old gal sizzle!" Phil was unconcerned; it was not his job.
"I have to go," I insisted. "Maybe if you'd ask me, I could come into town tomorrow night."
He grinned. "O. K., I'll ask you. Run along to your rich old lady, sweet." And he leaned over and kissed the tip of my nose. "I'll give you a ring tomorrow."
"All right," I kissed him once for good measure and flew up the stairs.
"I'm awfully sorry to have kept you waiting," I began breathless apologies as I untied the hood of the drier and lifted it upward. "I—A shriek, long drawn-out like that of a locomotive whistle at a grade crossing split the air. It was myself screaming again and again as the limp, lifeless body of Mrs. Witherspoon fell face forward upon my breast!
For one agonizing second I stood frozen. The noise of the drier like a giant plume roared in my ears. Louder, louder, louder! A faint odor of bitter almond reached my nostrils. I sneezed. I swayed. I pitched downward to the floor.
When I opened my eyes I was lying on the black and silver divan in the salon lobby. Through a mist I saw the moving figures of a man and a woman. I tried to speak. Nausea overwhelmed me. I was going to be sick. Someone held a basin before me, and then someone wiped my face with a cold cloth.
Presently the mist cleared. Mrs. Greely, her face flushed, was bending over me.
"Better now?" Her voice came from an immeasurable distance.
"Better." The effort to speak sent a wave of pain through my head.
"You'll be all right soon," "She did it! She did it!" A second voice shrill and strained screamed the words. Eliza moved into focus. She loomed above me, tall and forbidding; she pointed an accusing finger in my direction.
"Eliza—please!" a man said tiredly, and I knew that Mr. Horace was in the room.
"I tell you she did it!" Eliza would not be hushed. "She stole the emeralds!"
"The emeralds!" repeated Mr. Horace stupidly. "What emeralds?"
"She knows!" The maid's face was livid with hatred. "She watched me put them on the table. She knows!"
"What is she saying?" Mr. Horace was utterly bewildered.
"Mrs. Witherspoon's jewels," I faltered. "They were on the table."
"You stole them! After she was dead you stole them!" Eliza laughed hysterically. "You robbed the dead!"
"The dead?" I stared at her. "Mrs. Witherspoon is—dead?"
"Yes—yes, she is dead," Mr. Horace said dully. "Mother is dead."
He groped for a chair and sank heavily into it. His face was ashen; he looked ten years older than the little man who had come into the salon—was it only this evening—to ask his mother a question, a question which would remain unanswered and unanswered!
"Poor mother!" His voice cracked slightly. "The excitement of the ball was too much for her."
"She died—in there?" I motioned to the anteroom. I saw that someone had drawn the silver curtains tightly together.
"In there," replied Mrs. Greely gravely, as one speaks of death.
And I faintly?
She nodded. "Eliza found you on the door—the two of you."
"Thief!" shrieked Eliza, and burst into a paroxysm of weeping. I shuddered, seeing again that shapeless bundle in the bright-colored kimono as it had toppled toward me.
Eliza's awful weeping filled the room.
"When—when did she die?" My voice was a whisper.
"You don't know?" Mr. Horace regarded me curiously. "But you were there!"
I swallowed with an effort. "No," I said. "No, I was downstairs in the pantry."
"In the pantry?" I think he thought I had gone suddenly daft. "What were you doing in the pantry?"
"She was hiding the emeralds, that's what she was doing!" Eliza uncovered her swollen face.
"Mrs. Greely," he motioned to the housekeeper, "will you take Eliza to her room? She—she has gone to pieces." And he rubbed his forehead between his eyes as

But the latest edition to my collection is my favorite. It seems to me that it gives the only sensible advice I have ever heard on this debatable subject. It is called "How to Look Eleven Years Younger," by Gail Burgess.

Burgess is not a beautician; he does not attempt to advise you how to look 11 years younger by cosmetics or face-lifting, or to keep fit by exercises or diet or various prohibitions. He believes that youth is in the mind, and if you want to look 11 years younger, you have to do it by making your intellectual interests 11 years younger.

He has as frontispiece, a photograph—not a drawing, mind you, but a photograph—of a man and woman, husband and wife, sitting at a table in a restaurant. They have just ordered dinner, the waiter has gone off to get this order and they are waiting. They sit back with a completely dumb expression on their faces. They might as well have a placard on their chests saying, "Expect no new ideas from me. I have jelled."

Habit of Mannerisms

Then Mr. Burgess points out another habit of people who have crystallized, who could look 11 years younger if only they wouldn't act so Methuselahish. It is the habit of mannerisms. You know, sitting with your fingers touching as if in prayer, or digging your forefinger into your cheek, washing or ironing the hands, pulling down the mouth or mugging—all gestures of frustration and second childhood.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

Other mannerisms, which Mr. Burgess doesn't mention, but which indicate to me even more complete mental stagnation, are the use of phrases in place of thought. "What's wrong with that?" "That's what you think." "There you go again." With dread at a faculty or board meeting now I await the inevitable opening of nearly every member's discussion—"Well, it seems to me..."

Some of Mr. Burgess' aphorisms: "Crow's feet are caused by grins and grimaces and usually go with a fallen face."

"A perpetual smile that means nothing is a senile trait."

"Beauty parlors cannot make you youthful. The only efficacious facial massage is done from within by the mind."

"Dancing is a public revelation of the secrets of the subconscious mind and its revelations are often disastrous."

EDITOR'S NOTE: Seven pamphlets by Dr. Clendening can now be obtained by sending 10 cents in coin, for each, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, in care of this paper. The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reading and Gaining," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

CONTRACT BRIDGE

WHERE CREDIT IS DUE

IT IS NOT merely kind to give the opponents credit when credit is due them. It is also winning bridge, much more profitable in the long run than berating yourself and partner for not achieving the maximum result on a deal and thereby upsetting your side's morale. On many an occasion the bidding done by the other fellows makes it impossible for you to send as many messages across the table as you would like to.

This deal, furnished by C. B. Malchow of the Keamsburg Inn at Warner, New Hampshire, was put into the boards of a New York City duplicate game to see if anybody would arrive at the grand slam contract in spades which can be made by North and South against any defense. Not one pair—among them some very fine players—arrived at even 6-Spades.

DEATH AT THE MANOR

BY M. E. CORNE

RELEASED BY
CENTRAL PRESS ASSOCIATION

For one agonizing second I stood frozen.

READ THIS FIRST:

Elsie Ritter, a beauty shop operator, taking the place of her friend, Kitty, for a week in the private salon of Mrs. Horace Witherspoon, Sr., is disturbed by queer things she finds and odd people she meets at the Manor, the luxurious Witherspoon home. She finds her employer is an eccentric old woman with sadly misplaced vanity. She meets her granddaughter, Daphne; her daughter-in-law, Della Craig, an actress, who is a house guest, and the various servants of the household. Elsie overhears a violent argument between Daphne and her mother, during which the girl criticizes her grandmother. After meeting some of the other house guests, Elsie gives a manicure to old Mrs. Witherspoon's sister, who converses in riddles. While Mrs. Witherspoon, Sr., is under one of the four hair driers in the salon, Phil, Elsie's friend, drops in to see her and telephones from downstairs. Elsie goes down to see him.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY)

CHAPTER TEN

"LORDY!" I shot up like a jack-in-the-box when the kitchen clock struck ten. "I've been sitting here half an hour! Mrs. Witherspoon will give me what for!"

"Oh, let the old gal sizzle!" Phil was unconcerned; it was not his job.

"I have to go," I insisted. "Maybe if you'd ask me, I could come into town tomorrow night."

He grinned. "O. K., I'll ask you. Run along to your rich old lady, sweet." And he leaned over and kissed the tip of my nose. "I'll give you a ring tomorrow."

"All right," I kissed him once for good measure and flew up the stairs.

"I'm awfully sorry to have kept you waiting," I began breathlessly, apologies as I untied the hood of the drier and lifted it upward. "I—A shriek, long drawn-out like that of a locomotive whistle at a grade crossing split the air. It was myself screaming again and again as the limp, lifeless body of Mrs. Witherspoon fell face forward upon my breast!

For one agonized second I stood frozen. The noise of the drier like a giant plane motor roared in my ears. Louder, louder, louder! A faint odor of bitter almond reached my nostrils. I sneezed, I swayed, I pitched downward to the floor.

When I opened my eyes I was lying on the black and silver divan in the salon lobby. Through a mist I saw the moving figures of a man and a woman. I tried to speak. Nausea overwhelmed me. I was going to be sick. Someone held a basin before me, and then someone wiped my face with a cold cloth.

Presently the mist cleared. Mrs. Greely, her face flushed, was bending over me.

"Better now?" Her voice came from an immeasurable distance.

"Better." The effort to speak sent a wave of pain through my head.

"You'll be all right soon."

"She did it! She did it!" A second and voice shrill and strained screamed the words. Eliza moved into focus. She loomed above me, tall and forbidding; she pointed an accusing finger in my direction.

"Eliza—please!" a man said tiredly, and I knew that Mr. Horace was in the room.

"I tell you she did it!" Eliza would not be hushed. "She stole the emeralds!"

"The emeralds!" repeated Mr. Horace stupidly. "What emeralds?"

"She knows!" The maid's face was livid with hatred. "She watched me put them on the table. She knows!"

"What is she saying?" Mr. Horace was utterly bewildered.

"Mrs. Witherspoon's jewels," I faltered. "They were on the table."

"You stole them! After she was dead you stole them!" Eliza laughed hysterically. "You robbed the dead!"

"The dead?" I stared at her. "Mrs. Witherspoon is—is dead?"

"Yes—yes, she is dead," Mr. Horace said dully. "Mother is dead."

He groped for a chair and sank heavily into it. His face was ashen; he looked ten years older than the little man who had come into the salon—was it only this evening—to ask his mother a question, a question which would remain unasked and unanswered!

"Poor mother!" His voice cracked slightly. "The excitement of the ball was too much for her."

"She died—in there?" I motioned to the anteroom. I saw that someone had drawn the silver curtains tightly together.

"In there," replied Mrs. Greely gravely, as one speaks of death.

"And I fainted?"

She nodded. "Eliza found you on the floor—the two of you."

"Thief!" shrieked Eliza, and burst into a paroxysm of weeping. I shuddered, seeing again that shapeless bundle in the bright-colored kimono as it had toppled toward me.

Eliza's awful weeping filled the room.

"When—when did she die?" My voice was a whisper.

"You don't know?" Mr. Horace regarded me curiously. "But you were there!"

I swallowed with an effort. "No," I said. "No, I was downstairs in the pantry."

"In the pantry?" I think he thought I had gone suddenly daft. "What were you doing in the pantry?"

"She was hiding the emeralds, that's what she was doing!" Eliza uncovered her swollen face.

"Mrs. Greely," he motioned to the housekeeper, "will you take Eliza to her room? She—she has gone to pieces." And he rubbed his forehead between his eyes as though he, too, were in danger of sudden collapse.

"Very well, sir," Mrs. Greely placed her arms about the maid's shaking shoulders. "Come, Eliza!"

"And now, Miss Ritter," Mr. Horace continued when they had gone, "perhaps you had better explain." His voice trailed uncertainly. I felt a wave of pity for him. He was so obviously unfit to cope with the situation.

"Mr. Witherspoon?" I leaned toward him. "I didn't steal the emeralds. You must believe me!"

"The emeralds! Oh, yes! I had forgotten." He smiled wearily. "You must forgive me. My mother's death—"

"Of course—of course," I said softly. I was conscious of a feeling of mild surprise at the evidence of his deep grief. Mrs. Witherspoon, in my opinion, had not been one to inspire great love. Perhaps, I thought, perhaps he was remembering her as she must have been in her younger days; perhaps he had already forgotten the garrulous tyrant with whom I had had such brief and unpleasant contact.

Death, I was aware, drew a veil over life, softening its harshness and stern reality.

"She has been ill for many years," he said suddenly, as if thinking aloud. "Again and again I begged her to consult a physician, but she refused. She disliked speaking of illness; she wanted to remain forever young and strong."

"I tried to persuade her to postpone this affair tonight. She would not. And now she is dead. The excitement was too much for her worn heart."

"Yes," I nodded. "She looked badly."

The son sighed. "She had a full life, a very full life." He fixed his eyes blankly upon the ceiling.

"Mr. Witherspoon!" I hated to foist my own affairs upon the little man, but I had to get the business of the missing jewels settled.

"Yes, Miss Ritter?"

"I didn't touch the emeralds." "Now, now," for the first time he looked directly into my eyes, "you must not worry," he said kindly. "No one accuses you."

"Eliza accuses me."

"Eliza is not herself. My mother's death has upset her. She was very fond of mother. I am sure that we will find the jewels. They may have been mislaid."

"Thank you," I was near to tears. "I really never had my hands on them. Eliza laid them on the table and they were there all the time I was shampooing Mrs. Witherspoon's hair and setting the wave. I remember how they sparkled in the light. But—I had a sudden inspiration—but I didn't see them when I came back upstairs. Perhaps I was too excited."

Ours are mighty fine folk. Durbin Good is recovering from blood poisoning and, as he is confined to his home, much of his work is being neglected. So, a group of neighbors gathered at his place and husked 325 bushels of corn for him. Lunch was served by wives of the working men with Mrs. Good, Mae Rhymer and Mrs. Floyd Young directing. Time now for New Year's resolutions. I wonder why it is that those things are so easily broken? I've kept a few in my time, but mighty few. However, the making of the resolutions is beneficial, anyway, and I'll make some more this year. Along with the other resolutions I believe that everyone should resolve to remain out of war. Minnesota is Good Guess For Big Ten Cage Title

Johnny Kundla

Gordon Addington

By WALTER L. JOHNS

WERE NOT going out on a twig and predict which team will win the Western Conference cage race this season.

We're staying on the ground and saying that Minnesota will win the title if Purdue doesn't or if Michigan doesn't or if Northwestern doesn't or if Wisconsin doesn't or if Illinois doesn't or if Ohio State doesn't or if Indiana doesn't or if Iowa doesn't or if Chicago doesn't! Whew!

Guess that'll keep us in the good graces of that clan of "I told you so's" who speak up each March after the season's over and join in the victory song.

Since we started the chain of thought with Minnesota, let's take a look at the club Dave MacMillan is coaching in this, his twelfth season with the Golden Gophers.

Stars Return

Minnesota finished second last year after marring through all opposition for nine straight wins. The team tagged 16 victories in 20 starts for a fine record.

The 1938-'39 Gophers opened the season with four members of last year's starting five, six lettermen on the squad and at least eight sophomores of some merit.

Missing was the keyman and sparkplug of last season's club, Martin Rolek, who now is acting as MacMillan's assistant. But returning were the two high-scoring stars, Gordon Addington and Minnesota from Idaho university.

Stuhldreher Sees End Of Huddle System On Grid

CHICAGO, Dec. 28—(UP)—Harry Stuhldreher, the little man who used to bark signals for Notre Dame's famed "four horsemen," predicted today that the huddle would disappear from football within the next five years.

Replacing it will be the good, old-fashioned system of direct signal calling, he said. He is here to attend the annual meeting of the National Football Coaches association of which he is president.

Dapper Harry, one of the greatest quarterbacks of all time, has pioneered the movement to bring the direct calling system back. And he practices what he preaches.

He used the system when he was mouthpiece for the late Knute Rockne's immortal 1924 team. He taught the system during the 11 years he coached at Villanova and he has been doing the same thing at the University of Wisconsin.

"From my own experiences as a quarterback," he said, "I'm convinced there is no substitute for direct signal calling. If I'm the quarterback of a team and carry the responsibility of calling the plays, I want an even break in doing it. I want to see the opposing team chance its defensive alignment and be able to call a play to meet that emergency.

"That's one of the greatest weaknesses of the huddle system. It's being outmoded because it can't cope with the constantly changing defenses. If a team has called one play in a huddle and then finds the opposition has shifted to meet it, the offensive team has to recheck its signals. Sixty to 65 percent of the country's top-notch teams had to do that this year. There's your best argument for direct calling of signals."

He said that in addition to meeting the constantly changing defenses, direct signal calling also: Increases the number of plays per game; places responsibility on the quarterback, but gives him a better opportunity to call plays more accurately; eliminates "helpful huddle suggestions which only serve to confuse the quarterback"; makes the defense more alert; and is more popular with the spectators and the players themselves.

TWO BIG TEN QUINTETS ANNEX GARDEN CONTESTS

NEW YORK, Dec. 28—(UP)—Two of the Big Ten's best basketball teams, Minnesota and Illinois, headed home today with victories over New York teams.

Minnesota scored its fifteenth consecutive victory, a string started last year, against New York university, 38-32. Illinois crushed Manhattan, 60-41, in the second half of a double-header at Madison Square Garden.

Neither of the winners was headed, although Minnesota did have to fight late in the game when N. Y. U. bought the score to 27-25.

Levis Dehner of Illinois scored 25 points against Manhattan to break the old garden scoring record of 23 held jointly by Wes Bennet of Westminster and Jack Bromberg, Long Island university.

Meet In Lidifter At

7:30 O'Clock

With several City League cage teams strengthened since last week, basketball fans can expect plenty of action tonight in the second round of the loop's schedule. The festivities begin at 7:30 o'clock in the Circleville Athletic Club gymnasium with Byron Eshelman, Stevenson Fives as the referee.

The Eshelman Feed team, which looks like one of the best in the loop with Purcell, Styers, Melson Davis and Wellington comprising the starting lineup, takes on the Stevenson furniture team, comprised of the city's colored youth. Last week the Stevenson team looked weak, but may benefit by a couple of additions.

The second joust of the event pits Bach's insurance, augmented by addition of Judy Gordon and Eve Merriman, two of the city's outstanding cagers, against the Circleville Merchants also strengthened. The Merchants have Jerry Millar, Chuck Young, Squirt Gulick and Teck Roderge available for tonight's game. In addition to the boys who played last week, Addison Zeimer will prevail at the tipoff post.

Game No. 3 puts the Walla bakery, comprised of Williamsports youth against Glitt's food market the Stoutsville entrant.

The windup finds Ralston-Pulina's entry tangling with the Cakes cleaners. This game should be a honey from the start to the finish since both teams looked good last week. The Purina team centers its offensive around the high-scoring Creighton Anderson while the cleaners depend on A. Kaiser, former Walnut star, for most of their points.

Popular prices prevail again for the evening's card.

PASADENA, Cal., Dec. 28 (UP)—Dan Hill, co-captain of one of the great centers of 1937 was on the injured list today. Duke began secret practice for the Rose Bowl game next Monday against Southern California.

The Blue Devils worked Brookside park yesterday on pass defense and for the first time since arriving in California, the players met in sharp body contact. Eric Tipton, star halfback whose kicking helped beat Pittsboro and put Duke in the Rose Bowl, again devoted most of his time to punting and the first string ends raced down the field to tackle the receivers.

WEST COAST '5' WINS 49 TO 35 OVER BUCKEYES

BERKELEY, Cal., Dec. 28—(UP)—California's tall basketball team utilized a tight defense last night to defeat Ohio State 49 to 35 in an intersectional game.

California kept the visitors from the basket and State was able to make only 10 field goals, most of them long shots, during the entire game. The Golden Bears held the Buckeyes scoreless for the first seven and a half minutes while running up a substantial score.

Close guarding of the California players resulted in numerous fouls and State made 15 points on free throws.

California had a 27 to 20 lead at the half.

In the opening game, Nebraska defeated U. C. L. A. 35 to 30, for its second straight victory over a Far Western team. The Huskers won from California the previous night. Nebraska had a 19 to 16 lead at the half. Al Werner, a guard, made 17 points to lead the winners in scoring.

Minnesota is Good Guess For Big Ten Cage Title

Johnny Kundla

Gordon Addington

By WALTER L. JOHNS

WE'RE NOT going out on a twig and predict which team will win the Western Conference cage race this season.

We're staying on the ground and saying that Minnesota will win the title if Purdue doesn't or if Michigan doesn't or if Northwestern doesn't or if Wisconsin doesn't or if Illinois doesn't or if Ohio State doesn't or if Indiana doesn't or if Iowa doesn't or if Chicago doesn't! Whew!

Guess that'll keep us in the good graces of that clan of "I told you so's" who speak up each March after the season's over and join in the victory song.

Since we started the chain of thought with Minnesota, let's take a look at the club Dave MacMillan is coaching in this, his twelfth season with the Golden Gophers.

Stars Return

Minnesota finished second last year after marring through all opposition for nine straight wins. The team tagged 16 victories in 20 starts for a fine record.

The 1938-'39 Gophers opened the season with four members of last year's starting five, six lettermen on the squad and at least eight sophomores of some merit.

Missing was the keyman and sparkplug of last season's club, Martin Rolk, who now is acting as MacMillan's assistant. But returning were the two high-scoring stars, Gordon Addington and

From the first practice days the squad looked stronger offensively than last year, but weaker defensively.

The Gopher Big Ten schedule gets under way Jan. 7, with Chicago, and ends March 6 against Iowa at Iowa City. As in past seasons, 12 conference games are listed on the mesh menu, but under a new ruling of the conference, the Gophers will play all nine opposing teams in the loop.

Won Title in 1937

Outside of the Big Ten competition, Minnesota schedule included games with South Dakota State, University of South Dakota, Carleton, Creighton and Nebraska, already played. All five opponents fell before the smooth working Minnesota club.

One eastern trip is on the schedule, the team traveling to New York to meet New York U. in the Garden Dec. 27, and Temple at Philadelphia two days later.

In all previous seasons, Coach MacMillan's teams have finished second three times and tied for the conference championship once—in 1937.

An advocate of the intricate short passing game, MacMillan coaches his teams to play fast, interesting basketball. MacMillan, a former member of the New York Celtics pro team, came to Minnesota from Idaho university.

Stuhldreher Sees End Of Huddle System On Grid

CHICAGO, Dec. 28—(UP)—Harry Stuhldreher, the little man who used to bark signals for Notre Dame's famed "four horsemen," predicted today that the huddle would disappear from football within the next five years.

Replacing it will be the good, old-fashioned system of direct signal calling, he said. He is here to attend the annual meeting of the National Football Coaches association of which he is president.

Dapper Harry, one of the greatest quarterbacks of all time, has pioneered the movement to bring the direct calling system back. And he practices what he preaches.

He used the system when he was mouthpiece for the late Knute Rockne's immortal 1924 team. He taught the system during the 11 years he coached at Villanova and he has been doing the same thing at the University of Wisconsin.

"From my own experiences as a quarterback," he said, "I'm convinced there is no substitute for direct signal calling. If I'm the quarterback of a team and carry the responsibility of calling the plays, I want an even break in doing it. I want to see the opposing team chance its defensive alignment and be able to call a play to meet that emergency."

"That's one of the greatest weaknesses of the huddle system. It's being outmoded because it can't cope with the constantly changing defenses. If a team has called one play in a huddle and then finds the opposition has shifted to meet it, the offensive team has to recheck its signals. Sixty to 65 percent of the country's top-notch teams had to do that this year. There's your best argument for direct calling of signals."

He said that in addition to meeting the constantly changing defenses, direct signal calling also: Increases the number of plays per game; places responsibility on the quarterback, but gives him a better opportunity to call plays more accurately; eliminates "helpful" huddle suggestions which only serve to confuse the quarterback; makes the defense more alert; and is more popular with the spectators and the players themselves.

BERKELEY, Cal., Dec. 28—(UP)—California's tall basketball team utilized a tight defense last night to defeat Ohio State 49 to 35 in an intercollegiate game.

California kept the visitors far from the basket and State was able to make only 10 field goals, most of them long shots, during the entire game. The Golden Bears held the Buckeyes scoreless for the first seven and a half minutes while running up a substantial score.

Close guarding of the California players resulted in numerous fouls and State made 15 points on free throws.

Captain Jim Hull, ace of the Ohio State team, led the scoring with 14 points. Bill Biggerstaff made 12 to lead the California shooters.

peninsula and isolated at least one community. Telephone and telegraph communications with Manistique, Mich., a city of 5,000 population, were broken. Six foot drifts blocked highways. Houghton, Michigan, reported 21 inches of snow.

Temperatures were falling fast throughout the mid-South and were expected to reach sub-freezing levels in northern Florida today.

The lowest reading at Chicago was two above but was expected to drop to six below. The city has had no sub-zero weather in three years. New York's millions were comparatively comfortable with the temperature at 25 degrees early today. Kansas City reported a minimum temperature of 10 degrees yesterday, but it had risen to 21 early today.

The lowest record temperatures included Minot and Devil's Lake, N. D., 22 below; Bemidji, Minn., 20 below, and Duluth, Minn., 14 below.

ANOTHER FACES QUESTIONING IN STILL INQUIRY

Charles H. Ratcliff, 32, former Pickaway countian, was arrested by the sheriff's department of Madison county, Tuesday afternoon, and returned to Circleville in the investigation concerning a small still confiscated Sunday on a Jackson township farm.

Ratcliff was brought to Circleville by Deputy Sheriffs Earl Weaver and Robert Adkins. Howard Wells, 22, of Jackson township arrested Sunday night, is being held for investigation. No charges have been filed.

G. B. Bishop, 57, also of Jackson township, arrested with Wells Sunday night in the investigation of the still, was fined $5 and costs Wednesday by B. T. Hedges, justice of peace, on a charge of intoxication. Bishop was committed to the county jail when he failed to pay. Deputy Sheriff Weaver said he believed Bishop, who had been living with Wells, had no connection with the still.

Confiscation of a still, made from an oil barrel, and 50 gallons of mash followed the investigation of an auto accident by the sheriff's department Sunday night.

An auto driven by Wells went into a ditch on the Goosepond pike. Officers said Wells was intoxicated on mash. A copper coil was found in his home and the still was later located along a creek.

CLARKSBURG WINS, 31-27, FROM JACKSON TOWNSHIP

Clarksburg reserves won, too, 12-6.

room, the oval room, palm court and the large foyer, all decorated with gilded lilies, moonlight mirrors, cellophane leaves, gold vining. They danced to two orchestras, Emil Colanin's in the main ballroom; Alexander Haas' red-coated Hungarians in the oval room. All the bars except a hangover retreat specialized in champagne, which was available in the ratio of two bottles per three guests, with a reserve supply in the basement.

The supper menu included such simple items as bean soup and breast of chicken. Breakfast was served at 4 a. m.

There had been 1,500 invitations, and many on the list were of the retiring, highest social order, who seldom can be lured into public even on an occasion such as this—the biggest debut in years.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, escorted by Charles West, man-about-town, was among the first arrivals. She carried a gray biege fur which she wraps around her feet while sitting in a draft. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., accompanied Mrs. Cornelius Dresselhuys, sister of Tommy Manville. Others of that social rank streamed in after them.

can obtain benefits will begin on the day of which they get their appointment card.

He also warned workers that to be eligible for unemployment benefits they must have worked 20 out of the last 52 weeks in an industry employment three or more persons.

Early reports from the Unemployment Compensation Commission's 190 scheduling stations which opened Tuesday indicated that all previous estimates of claim applications would be far from accurate.

During the first day the scheduling stations were open, only 10,000 of Ohio's jobless received appointment cards telling them when and where to apply for benefits. The scheduling stations will be open until Dec. 31 and U. C. C. officials had expected approximately 300,000 applications for unemployment benefits.

Many Not Qualified

Between 20 and 25 percent of those applying for appointment cards were turned away as not qualified for unemployment benefits, it was said.

U. C. C. officials, however, anticipate an increase in daily applications between now and the end of the month, and base their prediction on the 300,000 figure. Unseasonably cold weather throughout the state was blamed by U. C. C. officials for the small showing.

Dispatches from Cairo said that Hubert Dechamps, governor general of French Somaliland, had suppressed an effort by Italians in the colony to demonstrate in favor of Italy, and coincidentally asked Paris for troop reinforcements.

Estimates published here put the French strength in Somaliland at less than 2,000 troops, against 370,000 in Italian East Africa.

The lowest reading at Chicago was two above but was expected to drop to six below. The city has had no sub-zero weather in three years. New York's millions were comparatively comfortable with the temperature at 25 degrees early today. Kansas City reported a minimum temperature of 10 degrees yesterday, but it had risen to 21 early today.

The lowest record temperatures included Minot and Devil's Lake, N. D., 22 below; Bemidji, Minn., 20 below, and Duluth, Minn., 14 below.

ANOTHER FACES QUESTIONING IN STILL INQUIRY

Charles H. Ratcliff, 32, former Pickaway countian, was arrested by the sheriff's department of Madison county, Tuesday afternoon, and returned to Circleville in the investigation concerning a small still confiscated Sunday on a Jackson township farm.

Ratcliff was brought to Circleville by Deputy Sheriffs Earl Weaver and Robert Adkins. Howard Wells, 22, of Jackson township arrested Sunday night, is being held for investigation. No charges have been filed.

G. B. Bishop, 57, also of Jackson township, arrested with Wells Sunday night in the investigation of the still, was fined $5 and costs Wednesday by E. T. Hedges, justice of peace, on a charge of intoxication. Bishop was committed to the county jail when he failed to pay. Deputy Sheriff Weaver said he believed Bishop, who had been living with Wells, had no connection with the still.

Confiscation of a still, made from an oil barrel, and 50 gallons of mash followed the investigation of an auto accident by the sheriff's department Sunday night. An auto driven by Wells went into a ditch on the Goosepond pike. Officers said Wells was intoxicated on mash. A copper coil was found in his home and the still was later located along a creek.

CLARKSBURG WINS, 31-27, FROM JACKSON TOWNSHIP

Clarksburg high school cagers, coached by Robert Terhune and unbeaten in Ross county competition, won a hot 31-27 basketball game from the Jackson township team Tuesday evening on the Fox court. The fray was interesting from start to finish.

Clarksburg reserves won, too, 12-6.

room, the oval room, palm court and the large foyer, all decorated with gilded lilies, moonlight mirrors, cellophane leaves, gold vining. They danced to two orchestras, Emil Coleman's in the main ballroom; Alexander Haas' red-coated Hungarians in the oval room. All the bars except a hangover retreat specialized in champagne, which was available in the ratio of two bottles per three guests, with a reserve supply in the basement.

The supper menu included such simple items as bean soup and breast of chicken. Breakfast was served at 4 a. m.

There had been 1,500 invitations, and many on the list were of the retiring, highest social order, who seldom can be lured into public even on an occasion such as this—the biggest debut in years.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, escorted by Charles West, man-about-town, was among the first arrivals. She carried a gray biege fur which she wraps around her feet while sitting in a draft. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., accompanied Mrs. Cornelius Dresselhuys, sister of Tommy Manville. Others of that social rank streamed in after them.

Detectives Also Present

Scores of detectives mingled with the guests, guarded the doors against newspaper photographers, the windows against any passerby who might be inclined to rock throwing, and the guests against pickpockets and other thieves who might have slipped in among them.

By contrast, Miss Frazier's party exceeded in cost by at least $25,000 the debut of Miss Gloria Baker, last year's glamor girl, who spent $50,000. Miss Baker recently became Mrs. Henry J. Topping, wife of the tin plate heir.

In luxurious display and social rank of its guests, the party had not been equaled in years. There were 500 stags and debutantes invited, three stags for every two debutantes, and more than 300 married couples.

The object of their attention has just reached 18. She is slim, dark, vivacious. She weighs 116, wears size 12 dresses, is five feet six inches tall. Her hair is bluish black and hangs to her shoulders. Her eyes wide-set, her lips broad and delicate. She flies an airplane, smokes cigarettes constantly but drinks nothing that is alcoholic.

Her paternal grandfather, Frank Pierce Frazier, made the family fortune in grain.

Estimates published here put
